Linda,

For the record, I am not a "paid blogger." I finance my own website and I do not take a dime from anyone for my website or my blog. If you notice, there is no advertising on my website. This is deliberate on my part because I do not want to even give the appearance that my opinions are for sale. My opinions are expressly my own and I owe no allegiance to anyone or anything but to the United States of America.

Secondly, I have absolutely no idea what you are talking about regarding the "Hispanic Caucus" or what endorsements it has made. If this is about Mrs. Kramer, you need to take that up with her because I never mentioned it and it has nothing to do with me. I'm copying her with this email so she can respond if she'd care to.

I am not playing "political games." I am merely doing research about you and the other candidates, which I have done since 2011 when I started this blog, for the purpose of informing the electorate about what I uncover. I make my endorsements based on the information that I dig up, and then it's up to the voters to decide.

Your threats that you will "consider the appropriate action" against me are pointless, because I have backed up all my statements with hyperlinks to public records which were obtained legally. I also know my rights as a citizen journalist with respect to the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

That being said, if there is something specific that I have written which is proven to be unfactual, as I have noted to you in the past, I am always more than willing to retract, correct, and apologize as the situation warrants.

It is never my intention to print outright lies and falsehoods. I wish I could say the same about some politicians, including yourself. Maybe take a look at some of the things you have said in the past that don't pass the smell test.

Just a thought.

Please also note that, as a "candidate" running for office, you are considered a public figure and you should expect to be scrutinized and criticized, if necessary. If you can't handle the same scrutiny that every single politician in America faces, maybe you're not cut out for the public arena.

Just a thought.

Stephanie
